

SEASONS OF THE NORTH

---

---

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JEFF RICHTER

WITH ESSAYS BY
JOHN BATES · JUSTIN ISHERWOOD · TERRY DAULTON · CHAD MCGRATH

© 2003 Jeff Richter

Photos on pages 22 and 45 copyright© A.M. Richter

All rights reserved. No portion of text or photographs in this book may be copied in any manner without the express written permission of the photographer and publisher.

Published by Nature's Press
Jeff and Rosy Richter
PO Box 371, Mercer, WI 54547

Books and prints available at
Nature's Gallery
Main Street
Boulder Junction, Wisconsin
Open mid-May to October

Design and editing by
Linder Creative Services

ISBN: 0-9741883-0-1

Printed in the United States of America

"Bottoms up!"

"Navigator"

*Sandhill cranes are becoming more common throughout the North.
Their clattery call is one of my favorite bird sounds; Crex Meadows Wildlife Area, Burnett County, Wisconsin.*

Many of the old farm fields in the North now produce wildflowers rather than a crop.

Left: Easily the most eerie, ominous and unusual light I've ever photographed—right out our back door.

Rarely-seen cougar

Left: Classic northwoods

THE SIREN'S SONG

---

Fall

by Chad McGrath

The sweltering heat of August has melted away. Foliage mimics summer's rainbows. Lakes reflect these colors, and the sun's lower arc through the sky changes how its light sparkles on water's wind-ruffled surface. This is fall. And no one can deny fall's beauty. Who would want to?*

Yet for those who love the North, there is more to fall than simple beauty. Beauty is a siren—it seduces but cannot last. Nature changes. As Emerson said, “Nature is like an immutable cloud, always and never the same.” Those who love it here embrace change, and fall, perhaps more than any other season, brings change.

The trumpeter swan is an impressive bird with its immense size and eight-foot wingspan. They tend to be approachable, allowing the use of a wide-angle lens (left) in addition to the usual telephoto (above).

Snow dunes create sensual shapes on Lake Superior; Apostle Islands National Lakeshore.

Left: Slightly overcast light enhances the texture of soft snow sculptures.